A Creative Methodology course at Oxford House College adds credibility to any teacher!

The central objectives of the Creative Methodology Course are:

- to help trainees focus on professional practice and knowledge
- to enhance trainees' professional status, both within their teaching institutions and within the profession as a whole

Specific objectives include:

- fostering an in-depth awareness of latest theory and practice in ELT, in terms of approaches to teaching, techniques and lesson models
- promoting professional collegiality
- encouraging experimentation and creativity in teaching methodology

The Creative Methodology Course syllabus includes approaches and methods (e.g. silent way, task-based learning, visualisation, multiple intelligences, lexical approach), classroom techniques (e.g. Harmer's ESA teaching model, Scrivener's ARC teaching model), classroom management (e.g. instructions, eye contact, interaction, use of L1, discipline) and correction techniques (e.g. error analysis, recent changes in spoken British English).

Your observation of multilingual classes will give you the opportunity to explore the roles of observer and 'observee', to chart lesson stages and to see classroom management and techniques in practice. All course participants receive a pre-course bibliography which they can refer to prior to the start of their course (although the reading of these texts is not a requirement to complete the course).

Participants who are already practising teachers are also invited to complete a brief selection of self-observation sheets to encourage them to analyse their own classroom performance in their own teaching situation, prior to the start of their course. These self-observation sheets are submitted to the Course Director at the start of the course, helping him or her to gain more insight into the teachers' backgrounds and to better anticipate the teachers' needs during the course.

Minimum English level required at least B2

Effective Classroom Practice at Oxford House College adds confidence to any teacher!

The central objectives of the Effective Classroom Practice Course are:

- to help trainees focus on professional practice and knowledge
- to enhance trainees' professional status, both within their teaching institutions and within the profession as a whole

Specific objectives include:

- fostering an in-depth awareness of latest theory and practice in the specialist ELT areas including: IT, literature, business and UK culture
- promoting professional collegiality
- fostering an awareness of learner autonomy and independence

The Effective Classroom Practice Course syllabus includes library research, project work, autonomy and independent learning, teaching with IT, observation of teaching, staffroom collaboration and continuing professional development (CPD). Examples of syllabus content include activities for teaching English literature, conducting a cultural awareness survey, adapting to different learning styles and needs, promoting learning outside the classroom, teaching with internet and intranet, analysing didactic business English materials, career development and portfolio-building.

All course participants receive a pre-course bibliography which they can refer to prior to the start of their course (although the reading of these texts is not a requirement to complete the course). Participants who are already practising teachers are also invited to complete a brief selection of self-observation sheets to encourage them to analyse their own classroom performance in their own teaching situation, prior to the start of their course. These self-observation sheets are submitted to the Course Director at the start of the course, helping him or her to gain more insight into the teachers' backgrounds and to better anticipate the teachers' needs during the course.
